About the Faculty

Humanities Faculty

This is an excellent opportunity to join a well-established and successful faculty which values the contributions of each member of the team. The Humanities team works within a professional, enthusiastic, supportive and collegiate framework based on the school's CORE values. It is made up of six discrete subjects with geography, history, ethics and philosophy taught to 11 – 18 and sociology and psychology taught in the post-16 age group.

The Humanities Faculty is situated in a suite of rooms on a single floor in the school's North building. We have an ethos of 'all-ability' teaching which aims to get the very best out students and therefore there is no setting of classes. Curriculum development and sharing of good practice is an integral part of our approach to developing teaching and learning. Colleagues are encouraged to lead teaching and learning both within the faculty and across the school.

History is a very popular and successful GCSE and A level courses that has established itself as an integral element of the GCSE and Sixth Form provision. At GCSE we follow the AQA specification and at A level the OCR specification, which we have found are most suitable and challenging for our students. Many students choose a second humanities subject at both GCSE and A level. As a result, year on year, considerable numbers of our students pursue history or humanities related courses in higher education establishments.

The foundation stones for learning for both psychology and sociology are laid by the faculty in Key Stage 3 with geography and history being taught for 2 hours per week each whilst ethics and philosophy is taught for 1 hour per week. At GCSE all key stage 4 subjects have 5 hours per fortnight and post-16 subjects have 10 hours per fortnight.

We have a proven and lengthy record of success and for adding value. We believe our success is due our fantastic students, a very hardworking team and the excellent relationships we build with pupils, based on the school's CORE values.

We are seeking a colleague who is a team orientated, passionate, enthusiastic and committed, and able to contribute to the wider development of the subject, faculty and school.
